

Also interesting to hear this month how Qwest was able to find a DSL DSLAM provider to cut their DSL rollout cost by 40%. Wouldn't that have been nice to know on February 19th. But I'm sure they figured those costs in when they pushed for line-sharing to be eliminated because DSL rollout costs were too high.

Sure hope the consumer benefits from this.